As grandparents we form special relationships with our grandchildren. We have the opportunity to share wisdom, give advise, and enjoy rewarding moments with them. Looking forward to the time when they become toddlers is both exciting and sometimes trying, but we love them anyway. Grandchildren can sometime challenge our coping skills and the ability to keep up with all of that energy. Grandparents are not always as active as they should be. Speaking of energy, let's take a walk down memory lane, remembering the things that you did right and the things that you could have done differently with your kids. As grandparents we have the opportunity to invest that time into creating good habits with our grandchildren. This is the chance to birth new memories. As extended parents, new family memories can be wonderful. Add a beautiful bow and this book becomes a simple keepsake that can be shared with the next generation.
