Factors Affecting Demand for Primary Health Care Services by Residents in Nursing Homes and Residential Care Homes (Studies in Health and Human Services) Charles Crosby, Keith Edward Evans, Lesley Ann Prendergast

This work investigates the demand for general practice and community nursing services generated by residents in residential homes, nursing homes and dual-registered homes in an area where there is a high concentration of such facilities. The costs of care are analyzed in a production of welfare framework which shows that there was no direct relationship between degree of dependency and the demand for primary health-care services.
